Accounting for 87% of net migration in Australia

Over the last 10 years, the largest population growth has been in the 15-24 age group. This is due to net overseas migration (NOM) in that age group, which has increased from 1.0 million in 1985 to 1.1 million in 1995. Over the same period, Victoria had a net loss of population in each period, while New South Wales gained 1.0 million in the early 1990s.

New South Wales has had a net loss of population in each period since 1971. This has been largely due to the loss of young people in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

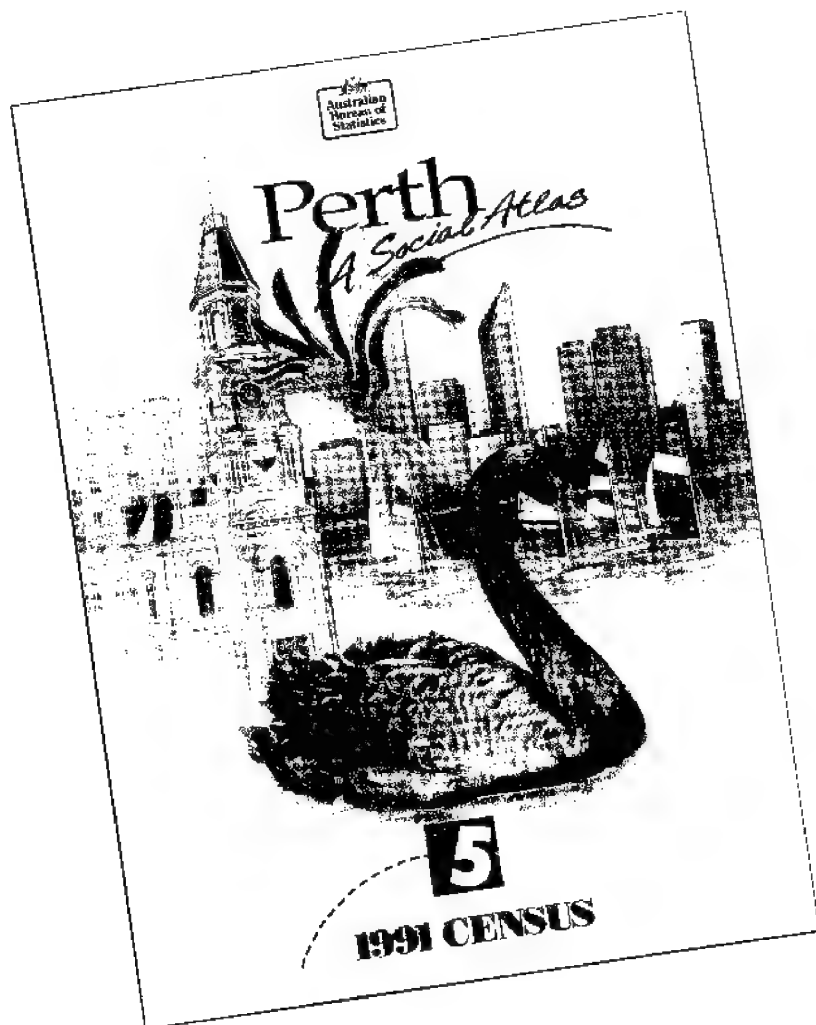

Composition of net overseas migration

There has been a large increase in the number of people aged 15-24 who have migrated to Australia. This is due to a large increase in the number of students migrating to Australia for tertiary education. In 1985, the number of students migrating to Australia was 1.0 million. By 1995, this had increased to 1.1 million. This increase has been largely due to an increase in the number of students migrating to Australia for tertiary education.

1991 CENSUS

After English, the languages most spoken at home were Italian, Greek, Cantonese, and Arabic. The national population who speak Greek and 4% of people who speak Italian were Australian born.

There are a number of factors which influence whether children of overseas-born parents learn their parents' language. These include the size of the ethnic community, the age of the children when they arrived in Australia, the parents' level of education, and the parents' occupation. In some cases, children of overseas-born parents may not learn their parents' language.
